When you can't be there as often as you'd like.

A small steady presence for someone you love, between your visits.

senior-bridge sends a friendly daily text to your loved one's phone — a morning hello, an evening check-in, real conversation. Built by a son for his mom.

Works on the phone she already has.

No app, no new device, no IT help needed. Just her existing phone number.

A familiar voice in the long afternoon.

Between lunch and dinner is when the day gets quiet. A 3pm hello helps.

You'll know how she's doing.

Optional weekly summary email keeps the family in sync — even from another city.

Eleanor's daughter set this up after her mom moved into Westmoor Court. Eleanor has always loved the night sky. She wakes up early, brews a cup of coffee, and sits in a chair just outside her door to watch the sky lighten. So they set Harvey up to text her about constellations and lunar cycles — what to look for in that early hour. It gives her a reason to get out of bed and keep moving. Some mornings she texts back about Orion or the moon phase. Some mornings she just reads it. Her daughter is two states away — and she stopped feeling like the only thing tethering her mom to the outside world.

This isn't a replacement for visits, or for the people who care for her every day. It's another voice. A small steady one.
